OLD TRIANA CEMETERY (3)

LOCATION: Sec. 22-5S-2W. C. SW SW. In the center of the town of Triana.

Note: This cemetery plot is quite large, extremely well kept and only sparcely spotted with graves. It appears that the founders were looking ahead when they designated thia large plot of ground for the cemetery but the town died long before it was full. Graves in this cemetery appear in clusters with each family somewhat set apart from the others.

The town of Triana was incorporated on November 13, 1819 and the city fathers were Henry Chambers, Waddy Tate, William Adair, John T. Lindsay and Thomas Bibb. History associates these names more closely with Huntsville than Triana.

Triana is situated on the banks of the Tennessee River and was established as a port from which to ship the cotton produced by the fruitful plantations nearby. When the railroad went through the area the planters started shipping their cotton by rail and the need for a port vanished. The bottom dropped out of the price of cotton in the 1840's and ruined many large planters. After the Civil War labor to work the fields became a problem and the town of Triana died. The town is now predominately Negro as is the general farming region.
