McDONNELL CEMETERY, 37-6

Summary Report

McDonnell Cemetery, Redstone Arsenal, Madison Co., AL, June, 2002.

This quiet cemetery is set back in the woods on the northeastern portion of the arsenal, at the end of a dirt and gravel road off HiPar Road.

McDonnell Cemetery, Redstone Arsenal, Madison Co., AL, June, 2002.

To the right is the access road, lightly gravelled, from Hipar Road. The access road goes about 175 yards from Hipar Road to the cemetery. Gate is at left of this view from within the cemetery. The cemetery is noted in Dorothy Scott Johnson's book CEMETERIES OF MADISON COUNTY, ALABAMA, VOL. I (1971) as a colored (former slave?) cemetery. She did not inventory it. It's location is NE/4, S22-T4S-R1W. It may hold around 500 graves.

Dorothy Scott Johnson would have had no way to inventory this cemetery, since it has no tombstones at all. It appears to be a very old cemetery, considering all of the deeply sunken grave depressions. There is no evidence of any recent burials. Therefore, it could well be an old slave cemetery. The Army has erected and maintained a good chain link fence around the cemetery and affixed a sign with the name, probably based upon old records from when the Army got the land to create the arsenal.

The depth of the grave depressions is illustrated in the view along the northern edge of the fence, as shown below:

McDonnell Cemetery, Redstone Arsenal, Madison Co., AL, June, 2002.

The view below is along the eastern edge of the cemetery, which is very near the southern end of Triana Boulevard in Huntsville. There are numerous grave depressions beneath the trees and leaves.

McDonnell Cemetery, Redstone Arsenal, Madison Co., AL, June, 2002.

Some of the grave depressions are so deep that they have become filled with leaves, as seen below:

McDonnell Cemetery, Redstone Arsenal, Madison Co., AL, June, 2002. There are many sunken graves evident within this cemetery. It lies on a small knoll in the woods, and hundreds of rectangular sinks are apparent. A few are child-sized, but most are adult-sized.

With no tombstones, old land records can lead to support for the namesake of the cemetery:

The OLD LAND RECORDS OF MADISON COUNTY, ALABAMA

book by Margaret Matthews Cowart shows that the NE/4 of Section 22, Township 4, Range 1 West, was purchased from the government in 1809 by Archibald McDonnell. In fact, this pioneer was the namesake for a creek that runs in the area, but as with so many other things, the spelling of the name varied from time to time, probably based upon phonetics and literacy levels of the clerks and map makers. The creek is now labeled as McDonald Creek, but Archibald McDonnell owned most of the land that the creek runs through. His descendants included several generations of Archibald McDonnells, as can be seen in the descendancy list below that was found in Ancestry.com's Ancestry World Tree files:

The descendancy list also shows that Mary Patton Matkin (7th line from the top) was a grandchild of the first Archibald McDonnell in Madison County. Mary Patton Matkin's story and tombstone photos can be found in the Summary Report for the Matkin Cemetery (37-3).

The known family history of the McDonnells is shown in the Ahnentafel below, which was also downloaded from Ancestry.com's files:

She was born 1730 in TEMPLEMORE PARISH,IRELAND. The private land sales of the area containing the cemetery and around it reveal the neighbors' names. It was probably both Archibald McDonnell's slaves and the neighbors' slaves that were buried here, considering the size of this cemetery. It was likely serving as a community slave cemetery. The neighbors were, of course, those who owned the lands in the same section as well as adjacent sections. It is likely, for example, that the slaves of the Jones family (see the Summary Report for the Jones Cemetery, 37-5) also were buried here, since this cemetery is so large and close to the Jones land holdings. The INDEX TO LANDS prepared by G. W. Jones & Sons for Madison County private land transactions (deeds) is given below to see the likely neighbors around the cemetery area in the 1800s:

The 1821 deed by Robert and Ann C. Lanford to the Methodist Episcopal Church was for the initial location of what became known a few years later as Jordan's Chapel. The name was given when the church abandoned the site in the NW/4 of this land section to move to a site donated by church trustee Bartholomew Jordan, near the current Botanical Gardens on Bob Wallace Avenue in Huntsville. However, for the few years that the church met on the Lanford lands, it was very near the McDonnell Cemetery (as well as the Matkin and the Madkin Cemeteries), so if the church had black members, it is possible that the cemetery was also used as a church cemetery for the time. One of the connections of the McDonnell family to the nearby Matkin family is shown in the marriage license below:

While the names of the people buried in the McDonnell Cemetery are unknown, it is known that some of the burials of the McDonnell family were in Maple Hill Cemetery in Huntsville. Indexes to Maple Hill burials include Archibald McDonnell, who died at age 77 on 1 October 1892, and Archie McDonnell, who died at age 75 on 13 June 1925. Some of the other family members are commemorated by the Fennell Monument in the Fennell family plot of Maple Hill, as shown below:

Today we can be fairly sure that the unknown deceased who are buried in the McDonnell Cemetery were participants either directly or indirectly with the white pioneers who are recorded as having made the early history of north Alabama. It was their labor that allowed the prominence and affluence of the plantation owners, and it took both parts of the social spectrum to realize the achievements of the old days. Without some degree of management by educated persons, the slaves could do little except manual labor. The real failing of the old plantation society was that it did not educate the slaves or treat them as indentured servants with rights. That could have led to earlier freedom and economic prosperity for all.
