

There are few distinct grave depressions remaining in the cemetery, but the above photo shows one of the more pronounced to be found here. It lies just to the right of an imaginary line that could be drawn between the hoe handle (leaned against the left foreground tree trunk) and the base of the cedar tree within the fence of the background. The rectangular depression is not deep, and it is filled with leaves, producing only a faint outline against the green grass. The grave is adult-sized.

Since there are no tombstones to be found here, the land records provide clues to those who may be buried in the cemetery. Below is the page from Margaret Matthews Cowart's book OLD LAND RECORDS OF MADISON COUNTY, ALABAMA for Section 32 (and others), where the cemetery is located.
