

than some part of his men first discerned the Indians crouched down in the shrubbery. He halted. Gave the precautionary commands, then fire. COL. CAPERTON, then CAPT. CAPERTON, not being sufficiently high to see the enemy exclaimed to his company, "Stop boys--don't fire until you see the object that you shoot at." Their fire was reserved--but twas for a short time for the firing of the first company caused the Indians to rise from their ambushade with hideous yells and gestures as they rushed toward our encampment, when CAPT. CAPERTON repeated the COLONEL's orders to his company, the Indians were shocked and checked in their impetuous course and filed off in a different direction.
